

Natural Reed Fencing

End Use and Care Guide

Decorative reed fencing is an affordable garden accent landscaping product. It is constructed with thin natural reeds fastened together with steel wire every four inches. Because reed fencing is a natural resource, the color will weather over time just like real wood decking.

Natural reed fencing is light filtering, meaning that light will filter through the spaces between the reeds. It can help provide additional privacy and protection from the wind as well as create a beautiful garden backdrop.

End Use

Reed fencing should not be considered a privacy fence, but a cost effective way to cover a chain-link or unsightly wood fence for aesthetic reasons. If you are looking to add more privacy to your current fence, you will need to layer the fencing 2-3 times depending on the level of privacy desired. One layer of fencing will not provide privacy.

Planning a tiki, luau, or pool party? Reed fencing is often used as a tropical accent material to construct tiki bars, cabanas, palapas, and even gazebos.

Installation

Reed fencing is designed to be attached to a current fence with cable ties or additional steel wire (not included in the package) and cannot stand on its own.

Care

Reed fencing cannot be painted. To care for your fence, we suggest a light application of water occasionally.
